Czar's Daughters Are Army Officers

The above photograph shows the two daughters of the Russian czar, grand duchess Olga (left) and grand duchess Tatiana (right), in the uniforms of the respective regiments of which they are colonels. The royal sisters are commanders of two crack bodies of cavalry, and Olga, who is 17, appears on ceremonial parades at the head of the Third Elizabeth Grand Hussars, while Tatiana, 15, is the chief of the Fourteenth Lancers.

Delft Blue and White

This is a charming afternoon gown made of white voile, with a flounce of blue satin on the skirt and a blue satin bodice.

The waist is plain, the fullness slightly gathered at the lower edge, and with full of white maline at the neck and wrists. Over the waist is an embroidered yoke edged with bands of the voile, braided with soutache. These bands also trim the skirt and edge of a square-cornered piece of the voile, which covers the back of the skirt and extends to waist-length.

All braiding and embroidery exactly matches the satin flounce, and the tiny buttons are covered with the satin.
